

Mandonna

MANDONNA

Certain female performers--Barbra Streisand, Cher and Joan Rivers, among them--tend to attract male imitators. These entertainers, with their blend of larger-than-life flamboyancy and manly features, are naturals for the dubious flattery of impersonation. Madonna is no exception. Whether sashaying around in a pink Marilyn Monroe dress, voguing or desperately trying to regain some attention Madonna offers a wealth of material for any imitator. Or so Mandonna have found. The all-male Madonna tribute band say that the Material Girl's more than 20-year career gives them almost more material than they can handle. Though one or two tattered bride gowns may appear on-stage, Mandonna is still all man. The seven mostly straight band members aren't female impersonators and sing all the songs in bass and tenor keys. The lead singer even has a beard.
